

FRANK G. MURPHY

BS '85, JD '92

FRANK G. MURPHY is a respected construction attorney who's able to provide a powerful perspective to his clients by bridging his engineering expertise and his legal career.

Currently, he's a shareholder in Anderson Kill, P.C., a full-service corporate law firm. At the Philadelphia office, Murphy's practice concentrates on corporate and commercial litigation, bankruptcy and restructuring, as well as real estate and construction matters.

Several construction companies have trusted Murphy to represent them with general corporate matters, dispute resolution and litigation. He's also worked with mechanics and banks, supporting his clients through claims, bankruptcy and asset recovery matters at the state and federal level in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Murphy's transactional practice includes the negotiation and documentation of numerous loan deals, contracts, and real estate leases and other real estate-related issues.

He is a member of the Banking and Lending Group, chair of the Board of Supervisors for Chadds Ford Township in Delaware County and previously served as president for the College of Engineering Alumni Association.

Murphy earned his bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering from the College of Engineering before attending the Beasley School of Law. And his family, too, is very much part of the Temple community. His wife Anna Marie, is a two-time graduate from the College of Engineering and the law school, and one of their daughters, Natalie, also graduated from Temple.
